Join this course and gain theoretical and practical knowledge on the service-learning methodology.

Learn how to design, implement and evaluate service-learning projects, and promote the use of this methodology in your university.

What is service-learning?

Service-learning in higher education is an experiential educational method in which students engage in community service, reflect critically on this experience, and learn from it personally, socially and academically. The activities address human, social and environmental needs, and aim at enriching learning in higher education, fostering civic responsibility and strengthening communities. Service-learning in higher education is integrated in the curriculum and can be used in any subject and academic degree (EASLHE, 2021).
